Hiccup had no idea what to do. He and his friend/crush Jack were staring at a bunny. It layed very still. So still, it was no wonder Hiccup thought it was dead.

Jack turned to Hiccup.

"When did you find this?" He asked staring at the rabbit.

Hiccup shrugged, "About an hour ago."

It was true, an hour ago, Toothless ran off into the forest. Hiccup followed the puppy into the forest and found him sniffing the fallen rabbit. Hiccup pulled him away, ran back home, grabbed Jack, and dragged him to the rabbit, which hadn't left for some reason.

'Maybe its dead...' Hiccup thought to himself.

Jack nodded and placed his hands on his knees.

Hiccup turned to him, "Is it dead?"

The rabbit was so still, it was possible. The two ten year olds stared at it. Nada.

"I dunno." Jack told him. He looked around.

Hiccup nodded slowly, "Maybe we sh-"

Jack crouched before the rabbit and held up a twig, "LET'S POKE IT!"

Hiccup's eyes widened.

"Maybe some other time Jack..." Hiccup pulled the boy away.

Jack groaned but let Hiccup drag him away.

The moment they left, the rabbit came to life and hopped away.
